

There are two kinds of people in the world-- those who talk and those who do.

Let me be clear, I cannot stand talkers. All of us have certainly encountered someone who is always talking about grand ideas, beliefs or values, but don't actually follow through. I have the highest respect for the people who say something and get it done. People who don't make excuses no matter how challenging their goal is, and it doesn't matter if they don't succeed. As long as they tried and keep going towards their goal, in my mind they can never fail.

There is someone in particular that I would like to recognize. Many of you may know of him because he teaches right on this campus. Mr. Harvie there by the physics department can be known to hold controversial beliefs, but there are few if any teachers like him in the world. He is the most dedicated teacher here because every time I walk in his class he has the friendliest smile on his face as he goes on to teach us about the subject that he is passionate about. There is nothing he is afraid of because he knows that he is doing his best each and everyday to teach, never once have I seen him complain or slack off. In fact, he is the only teacher who is not in the union, never once have I been to class where he is absent or unprepared, never once has he complained about teacher conditions publicly nor personally. The reason why I mention him is because he embodies the spirit that all of us should have right now, too many people make up excuses for failing to do something and we may not do our best on everything that we do.

Today, perhaps more prevalent than ever do we encounter talkers. There are people online that say that they are going to create a fantastic product on online fundraising websites, but actually stop developing the product because of "unforeseen costs" or unwillingness to follow through with their promises. The best example I have that you all can relate to are school projects. We have all had group members who say they are going to make fantastic things and participate, but when you give them actual responsibilities they go home and make up small excuses to get out because they are lazy.

What I am trying to say in probably my last address to you all is that we cannot be lazy, we need to do our absolute best in college, and go on to become top executives and world leaders. This does not mean that you can not go out or have fun, it is vital to good mental health to have a healthy lifestyle and social life. You need to have a healthy body, healthy mind, and then you can go on and change the world.

I DO NOT BELIEVE IN BULLSHIT.

I just wanted to talk about some things I have seen in the news lately, most of it is Trump this or or Trump that or a bunch of shit on political correctness. I don't know what caused this, but it may be the advent of social media. There are people who advocate trans-sex, same sex, hell even communism. You can obviously tell that I feel very strongly about these issues, so I'll let you in on my belief right now. I strongly oppose, all this nonsense about forcing people to accept you, to believe exactly what you believe is right, and accusing EVERYBODY of being sexist, racist, homophobic, or whatever you call hate for transexuals. Now don't get me wrong, even though I very firmly oppose trans and same sex marriage, communism, and political correctness, I do not hate individuals who support these things. BUT when they try to force you to a certain mindset, when they force legislation onto businesses, you have to stand up for what you as an individual believe is right, because to me, many of these decisions are like getting a tattoo or doing drugs, you can do it if you want to, but grow a pair instead of playing the victim when somebody does not support what you do. I want you all to go out and do what is morally right. Don't put up with this nonsense.

"I" DO NOT BELIEVE IN BULLSHIT.
